

PRESS RELEASE

“WILF KNIGHT AWARD 2011 - SHORTLIST ANNOUNCED”

The Security Institute is pleased to announce the shortlist for the Wilf Knight Award 2011. For this award universities nominate either a student project, report or dissertation which has featured as recent course work, and which shows particular distinction and/or innovation and which makes a valuable contribution to the field of security management or practice.

The shortlisted entrants are:

Leonie Darbin
Steven Bainbridge
Matthew Mackmin
Andrew Swapp
Will Chakawata

University of Leicester
Loughborough University
Cranfield University
Bucks New University
University of Portsmouth

Garry Evanson, Director of Sector Standards for the Security Institute, and co-ordinator of the Award, says

“There was a challenging diversity of subject matter for the judges to consider this year, and I am very grateful to them for their time and thoroughness in reviewing the content of the submissions made. We have had the highest number of entries for this competition so far, and I look forward to more universities participating in the Award next year, as its popularity grows.”

The winner will be announced at the prestigious Security Excellence Awards on 19th October 2011 at the Hilton Hotel, Park Lane, London. Good luck to all those shortlisted!

Note to Editors

The Security Institute is committed to raising standards within the security sector.

Supporting those new to security, it offers Student Membership, mentoring and Continuous Professional Development in addition to its own qualifications in security management and the Wilf Knight Award, recognizing excellence in student studies. Earlier this year it launched the Register of Chartered Security Professionals at the ultimate recognition of excellence for individuals.
