External Communications policy

Statement for Publication

At The Security Institute, we represent a diverse and inclusive community of security professionals from all faiths, backgrounds, and perspectives. In line with our commitment to neutrality and professionalism, we do not issue public messages tied to specific religious holidays or observances. Likewise, we refrain from making public statements on unfolding incidents or attacks until verified facts are available. This approach ensures that our communications remain respectful, impartial, and focused on what unites us — advancing professional standards and supporting all those who work to keep our communities safe.
